1. PURPOSE

To articulate the principles for academic freedom for students and staff at Morling College

2. DEFINITIONS

Key Term or Acronym	Definition
MC	Morling College

3. SCOPE

This policy applies to all students and staff at Morling College.

4. POLICY STATEMENT

Morling College Morling College (MC) considers that one of the fundamental prerequisites to achieving its aims and objectives is a commitment to the principle of responsible academic freedom.

5. PRINCIPLES

5.1 Truth

All truth is God's truth, and God has made it possible for humankind to discover his truth through biblical revelation and human investigation of the natural world. Academic staff are free to pursue truth and knowledge within their disciplines in the classrooms, in their research and writings, and in other public statements in their field of professional competence. Academic staff should exemplify intellectual honesty by striving for accuracy and making appropriate use of evidence, by carefully examining ideas, subjecting their work to critical scrutiny, and questioning orthodoxy when new evidence emerges; they should also provide opportunities for students to do the same.

5.2 Voluntary Association

College affirms the right of scholars and students in a democratic state to freely associate and cooperate around a shared set of core principles. The College will sustain an academic community in which faculty are free to engage in rigorous scholarly inquiry and expression within an intellectual tradition shaped by the evangelical Christian worldview. The College asserts that scholarly activity within the context of an evangelical identity (as reflected in the Lausanne Covenant and in Morling College's Statement of Beliefs and Community Code) will extend knowledge and enrich academic disciplines, benefiting the local, national and international communities.

5.3 Humility

While affirming the truth of the Bible and the knowability of the natural world, the College recognises that people are fallible and may interpret the Bible, ideas and data imperfectly. Since no individual or institution can possess a complete knowledge of truth, college representatives will maintain a humble stance towards the existing body of knowledge and retain a lifelong commitment to and engagement in further discovery. Academic staff and students should respect each other's opinions and the opinions of those outside the College and defend the rights of others to hold different views. Academic staff will not impute beliefs to students or others that are not supported by evidence or claimed by the other person or organisation.

5.4 Hospitality

Morling College welcomes visitors of all faiths and none into the conversations of its community. In contrast to sceptical or relativistic approaches which entertain the presence of competing worldviews but deny the validity of ultimate claims to truth, the Christian virtue of hospitality acknowledges that real differences between worldviews exist, and in doing so creates a space for genuine dialogue and engagement to take place. Hospitality builds trust, leading strangers into friendship, and requires that neither the host nor the guest forsake their worldview while instructing and learning from the other around a shared table.

5.5 Responsibility

Academic freedom is not an end in itself, but is to be exercised responsibly, with due regard for the mission and values of Morling College. Representatives of Morling College, including staff and students, should also be conscious that their public statements may lead to others forming perceptions of their faith, their profession, and their institution.

6. IMPLICATIONS FOR ACADEMIC STAFF

- 6.1 In the context of the above principles, Academic staff have the right and responsibility to exercise their professional and personal judgment in teaching and research. They are encouraged to disseminate the results of that research in the classroom, in dialogue with students, or through publications, without undue interference from the College administration and outside institutions or individuals.
- 6.2 The College administration will protect faculty from any request to retract or modify their research, publication or teaching merely because a complaint has been received. Only complaints alleging violations of professional standards, failure to comply with duly enacted and promulgated College policies or advocacy of positions incompatible with the doctrinal and ethical commitments of Morling College (as reflected in the Lausanne Covenant and in Morling College's Statement of Beliefs and Community Code) will be considered, and then only when the evidence supporting the allegation is more substantial than mere rumour. Any disciplinary proceedings that are initiated in response to such complaints will take place in accordance with the principles of natural justice and any applicable Morling College and Australian College of Theology policies and procedures (including, where relevant, the Morling College Staff Grievance Policy and Procedure and Underperformance and Misconduct Policy and Procedure).
- 6.3 Academic staff members believing their academic freedom has been unduly restricted may pursue resolution of this issue through the avenues established under the Staff Grievance Policy.

7. IMPLICATIONS FOR STUDENTS

- 7.1 MC is a Christian institution committed to the development of educational thinking within the framework of Christian faith. Students are expected to demonstrate an understanding of the various beliefs and values that are addressed in the units, and to subject their own beliefs to reasoned critique, but are not to be assessed on the basis of their personal acceptance of the beliefs and values endorsed by MC. Students' work is assessed and their progression determined solely on the grounds of academic merit.
- 7.2 Students believing their academic freedom has been unduly restricted may pursue resolution of this issue through the avenues established under the Grievance (Academic Matters) Policy: Education; Counselling, Chaplaincy And Spiritual Care, the Grievance Policy: International Counselling Students, or (in the case of students enrolled in Australian College of Theology awards), the ACT's Grievance Resolution Policy - Students.
